Bustamante turns himself in on molestation charges

RCHS teacher/football coach accused of inappropriate acts with girls on River City campus

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Arturo Bustamante, a teacher and football coach on the River City High School campus, turned himself in to the West Sacramento Police Department Friday for arrest, in the company of his attorney. He was booked into jail.

Bustamante, 42, has been charged with a number of misdemeanor and felony charges related to molestation and lewd conduct with minors.

He had been on paid leave from his RCHS duties after a female student alleged in October that Bustamante had "inappropriately touched" her earlier this year.

According to the Yolo County District Attorney's office, Bustamante now stands accused of several felony and misdemeanor counts of "lewd and lascivious acts" and "child molestation" involving four students, age about 15-16, during 2010-2011.

"His range of sentence if convicted is probation with up to one year in county jail to 4 years 4 months in prison," said Jonathan Raven, Chief Deputy District Attorney, in an emailed statement.

Raven declined to discuss the allegations in detail.

ARTURO BUSTAMANTE: denies allegations made by several female students at RCHS

The Washington Unified School District reports that Bustamante is now on "compulsory leave of absence pending the outcome of the matter."

Bustamante voluntarily turned himself after a warrant was issued for his arrest.

His attorney, West Sacramento's Fidel Martinez, told the News-Ledger yesterday he had not yet seen the charged filed against his client.

"He, of course, denies all the charges absolutely," said Martinez. "I have many emails and letters of support from West Sacramento residents on behalf of Mr. Bustamante. He's been a teacher for 15 years."

Martinez said bail has been set at $150,000. Bustamante was still in jail on Tuesday, with arraignment scheduled for that afternoon. Martinez said he would seek to have Bustamante allowed to be released on his own recognizance while awaiting trial.

It's not the first time Bustamante has faced an accusation of inappropriate conduct with a minor. In April, 2010, police received a complaint from a teenage girl who was a guest at his house, accusing him of setting up a video camera in a bathroom in the home for inappropriate purposes.

About that incident, Martinez responded to the News-Ledger:

"The police officers confiscated his computer and his videotapes, and they found absolutely nothing incriminating."

No charges were filed in that incident.

Arturo Bustamante ("Art," or "Coach Busta") is a graduate of River City High. He has been a social studies teacher at the school as well as second-year head coach for football, until he was placed on leave after the allegation was made in October.

The array was built with the help of $8 million in federal bonds, administered by the state and used to finance several energy-efficiency projects in the district. The district expects the solar array to provide most of the school's electrical needs -- with money saved on utility bills essentially going instead to pay off bondholders in 16 years.

Teens caught in Southport after chase

By Steve Marschke
News-Ledger Editor

Seven juveniles believed to have jumped out of a stolen car in Southport were taken into custody Sunday night after an intense search that included a helicopter and K-9 dog teams.

Things started at 11:43 p.m. when a call came in from the Ramada Inn on Halyard Drive in West Sacramento, reported Sergeant Nathan Steele of the West Sacramento Police Department.

"They had a concert at Ramada Inn with over 500 attending," said Steele. "A fight broke out. Our officers responded to assist security (personnel). One of our officers arrived, and saw a vehicle leave at a high speed. He got behind it, and ran the plates, and it came back stolen."

Police chased the Ford Explorer to Southport, where it crashed and lost a wheel near Southport Parkway, Otis Avenue and Turlock Street.

"The occupants fled. Numerous outside agencies assisted, including Sacramento P.D., the CHP, and our agency."

Police dog teams from both Sacramento and West Sacramento came to the scene, as did a Sacramento police helicopter, said Steele.

Three suspects -- a 17-year old girl and two 15-year old boys -- turned themselves in fairly quickly. Others "were in fields and backyards," said Steele.

After being warned, police turned loose police dogs to find the other fleeing teens, and took custody of four more -- all aged between 15-17, with addresses in Sacramento and Elk Grove. At least two of the hiding suspects were apparently bit by police dogs sent in to get them, said Steele.

"It is believed they are all in custody," said Steele. "They were taken into custody for possession of stolen property (the car) and resisting arrest."

Diversity is to be celebrated, not feared

(Editor's note: Last week's column in this space — on the virtues of parental hugging — was clipped short in a layout mistake. We've re-run it on page five. Our apologies for the error.)

As I write this, it's Martin Luther King, Jr. Day and I am reminded of the following column, which I wrote many years ago about a childhood friend who taught me some very valuable lessons early in life.

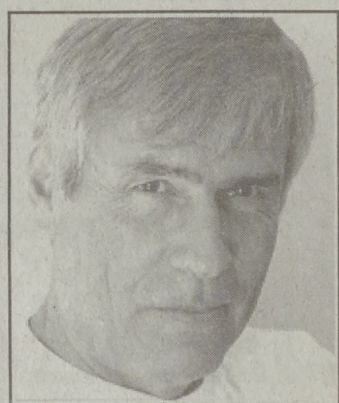

Unfortunately, but not surprisingly, racism is as alive and well in West Sacramento as it is in any other community in the United States. When I was in my early-teens, however, I got very lucky. I was befriended by fourteen-year old Jim Garcia.

Jim was as different from me as any person I had ever met. He was bold, and I was timid. He was sure of himself, and I wasn't. He said what was on his mind, and I tried to keep most of my thoughts to myself, not wanting to hurt anyone's feelings. He was also the first person I had ever spent any time with who wasn't white.

Our first summer as friends, Jim decided we needed to make some serious money, and somehow he came up with the bright idea of cleaning bricks. So, for almost three months, every morning, at the crack of dawn, I would crawl out of bed, walk the length of Michigan Boulevard and meet him at the corner of Michigan and Walnut. I never met him at his house. That wasn't allowed. Jim's family didn't have a lot of money and he wasn't proud of where he lived, although this was never talked about. He kept that and other hurts to himself. Jim didn't like to burden other people with his problems.

Once at work, which was a good mile

My Back Pages

By Daryl Fisher

away, Jim and I would begin what to this day is still the hardest job I have ever had. The object was to clean up old used bricks, which had been deposited by big dump trucks in even bigger piles, and get them ready for use on new construction projects. To do this, you had to take a hand ax and chop off all the old mortar, which is a lot more difficult to do than it sounds. We also had to do it while sitting on the hard, sun-baked ground with no shade anywhere in sight, during what had to be the hottest summer in West Sacramento history. At the end of the day, if you hadn't died from heat stroke and still had all your fingers left, you took your cleaned bricks and stacked them neatly on old wooden pallets. For every cleaned brick the boss said was in pretty good shape, you made three-quarters of a penny.

The only other people who seemed willing to do this work were bums. They would bring their wine with them and as the day wore on they were much more eager to steal the bricks Jim and I had cleaned than to work on their own. Fortunately, Jim was determined that we get full credit for every brick we cleaned and more than once I watched him, with his ax raised high in the air, stare down very rough looking men two or three times our age.

Somehow we both survived that summer and soon thereafter found ourselves the starting guards on the James Marshall High School basketball team. For three years we teamed up to help direct our team to a win and loss record which I'm sure both of us would like to forget. Jim was an even worse shot than me (which is really saying something), but on defense he was the most respected member of the team. He usually was assigned to guard the other team's top scorer and he would spend the entire game scratching and clawing to take the ball away. His tenacious and determined approach to basketball, and life, was something I really admired, and my respect for him continued to grow throughout our high school years.

When Jim and I graduated from James Marshall, we went our separate ways. Many years later, we accidentally bumped into each other at the California State Fair, exchanged handshakes, introduced our wives, and promised to stay in touch. We never did. A few years after that we were once again brought together, this time by the tragic death of a childhood friend of ours. After the memorial service, Jim and I talked at length about our friend and growing up together in West Sacramento. When it was time to go, Jim did something totally out of character for him. He reached over and hugged me. And he wouldn't let go.

Part of that hug belonged to our friend, but a part of it also belonged to Jim and me and the youthful years we had spent together trying to work out our differences and understand the cultures — different worlds, actually — which had shaped our early lives. That struggle, made necessary in me because there were so many qualities in Jim Garcia which I aspired to, forced me

Fortunately, Jim was determined that we get full credit for every brick we cleaned. And, more than once, I watched him, with his ax raised high in the air, staring down very rough-looking men two or three times our age.

to confront early in life the absurd premise upon which racism is based, and allowed me to grow up understanding that cultural and racial differences are to be celebrated, not feared.

There was a time in West Sacramento — and it wasn't all that long ago — when local realtors and decision-makers worked very hard to make sure people of color didn't end up living here. And as diversity has come to our city over the years, "white flight" has been part of the reaction to it, especially with so many concerned parents trying to get their kids into "safe" schools and environments where everyone is more or less alike, and where the goal seems to be to eliminate all the problems — good and bad — inherent when people of different ethnic and cultural backgrounds interact with each other.

What a tragedy, though, that so many of those young people will never get a chance to grow up with a friend like Jimmy Garcia.

19th-century institutions welcome even small accounts, including Germany's Sparkassen (savings banks), France's special accounts in savings and postal banks, Japan's massive postal savings system and China's highly accessible state banks and postal savings system.

The Chinese save 26 percent of disposable income, and the Japanese about 23 percent. In continental Europe, Germans, French, Swedes and others save more than 10 percent of household disposable income, while Americans save only a small fraction of that amount.

Why the difference between the United States and other countries, and can saving money become sexy again in our post-global-financial-meltdown economy? Will the Occupy Wall Street demonstrations become a wakeup call for Americans to take a sobering look at their personal finances? Garon believes the tide can turn, and offers some levelheaded policy suggestions for how America can restore a lasting balance between spending and saving.

Daryl Fisher's column -- corrected

Hug those kids some more

EDITOR'S NOTE: Last week, we accidentally clipped off the last couple of paragraphs of Daryl Fisher's column on the virtues of hugs. Here's Daryl's column in once piece. We apologize for the error.

A News-Ledger subscriber recently mailed me a section of an Ohio Lupus Foundation Newsletter entitled, "Hugging Can Improve Your Health." In the article, a Dr. David Bresler, who is the director of the Pain Control Unit at the University of California at Los Angeles, explained that the simple act of hugging can actually be a kind of "miracle medicine" that can relieve many physical and emotional problems in both adults and children. He went on to say that researchers have also discovered that hugging can help you live longer, protect you against numerous kinds of illness, cure some aspects of depression and stress, strengthen family relationships, and even help you get a good night's rest without using sleeping pills.

As I continued to read Dr. Bresler's article, he said that 15 years of research had convinced him that regular hugging can actually prolong life by curbing harmful periods of depression and stimulating a stronger will to live. Apparently, when a person is touched by another human being (which of course happens in the act of hugging) a chemical reaction occurs that sends extra supplies of oxygen to all the organs of the body – including the heart and brain – and this increase in hemoglobin helps tone up the whole body, which not only helps in the prevention of disease, but also speeds recovery from illness.

"Sometimes I just take out my prescription pad," said Dr. Bresler, "and write out a prescription for four hugs a day – at breakfast, lunch, dinner and bedtime."

The article ended by suggesting that everyone should make more of an effort in their daily life to hug their spouse, children, close friends and relatives – and to do so on a regular basis.

When I mentioned this to an old West Sacramento high school friend of mine the other day, he asked (with obvious concern), "You're not going to start hugging me every time you see me or something, are you?"

"No," I assured him, "but I think I may start hugging my kids more often. If nothing else, maybe it'll help show them how much I love them."

"Well," said my friend with a straight face, "my kids have more or less already informed me that they will know how much I loved them by how much money I leave them when I die."

"I guess that is kind of the American way," I said, "but I still think I'm going to give this hugging thing a try – at least with my kids. And if it works, who knows, maybe I'll write a big column about it and the next thing you know, all of West Sacramento will be hugging each other!"

"Well, good luck with all that," said my friend as he hurried off before I could hug him goodbye.

Later that evening, after dinner, I strolled right into my youngest son's bedroom, stepped up to him, and gave him the kind of big bear hug that Dr. Bresler had recommended.

"Dude, what are you doing?" demanded my 20-something year old son.

"I am not a dude," I reminded him, "I'm your father."

"Either way, what in the world was that all about?"

"I just think we all need to do a little more hugging around here."

"Why?"

"Because we're all going to be taking a long dirt nap one of these days, and while we're still here on this earth, I just think we all need to let the people we love the most know how we feel about them, and hugging each other more often is a good way of doing that."

"You mean you're going to start hugging me all the time?" my son asked with alarm.

"That's right."

"You're not going to start kissing me on the cheeks or anything like that, too, are you?"

"No, just hugging."

Within minutes of hugging my youngest son, I got a phone call from my obviously very worried daughter, wanting to know if I was okay.

"Of course I'm okay," I assured my daughter.

"Why do you ask?"

"Because Kyle just called me from his cell phone and said you were in his bedroom talking about dirt naps and stuff. Plus he said you had hugged him really hard. Is there something I need to know?"

"Geez," I said, "it was just one little hug."

"So, you're not feeling ill or anything like that?"

"Of course not!"

"And the doctor didn't tell you anything bad at that last appointment you had with him?"

"No!"

"Well, it's just that all of us think you've been acting a little weird since your last birthday."

"What are you talking about?"

"Age is just a number, Dad."

"I know that!"

"Well, Kyle was a little freaked out by that big hug you gave him and I just wanted to make sure you were feeling okay."

"I'm fine!"

A few days later, when I ran into my longtime friend again, he asked me how my hugging spree was going.

"I'm afraid it didn't really get off the ground," I admitted.

"Yeah," said my friend, "I think you have to be European or something for people to want you hugging all over them all the time."

"My youngest son said it actually freaked him out."

"Well," said my friend, "take it from me, just tell him you're going to leave him a bunch of money in your will, and everything will be okay!"

COUCH THEATER DVD PREVIEW

PICKS OF THE WEEK

"Ides of March" (R) -- Ryan Gosling and George Clooney stage a battle of the jawlines in this Clooney-directed political drama. Gosling plays Stephen, a young but experienced media man working on Clooney's Democratic presidential campaign. When an old associate (Paul Giamatti) tries to woo Stephen onto another campaign, a series of scandals and disillusioning revelations put the young politico in the center of the controversy.

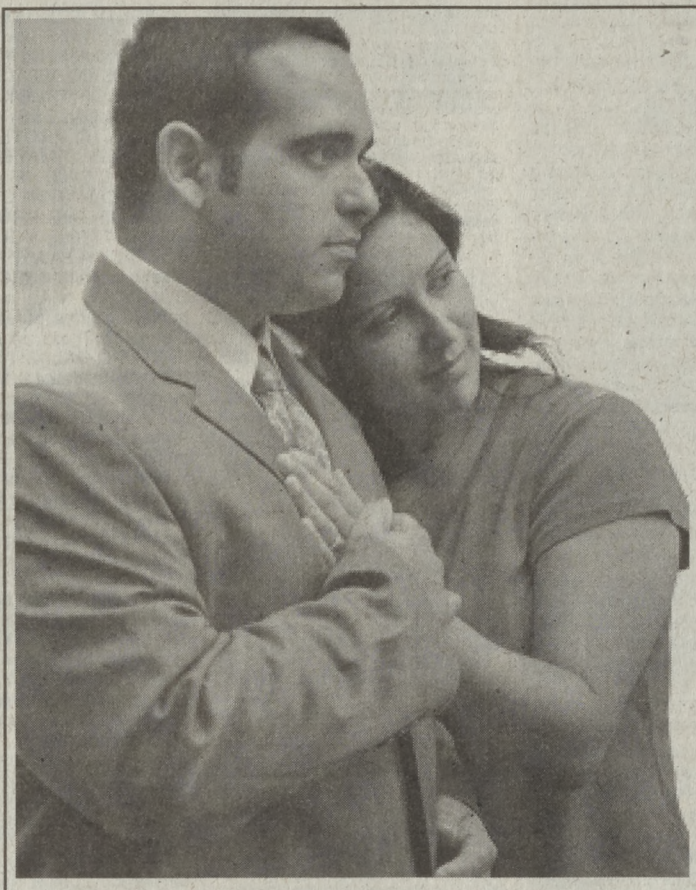

The election year and the politics at the heart of the campaign matter less than the character drama. The true conflict is in seeing Stephen's mantra -- that integrity and best intentions always win -- put to the test. Clooney's direction steers the movie toward straightforwardness, but skirts around easy answers.

"Courageous" (PG-13) -- This latest film from Sherwood Pictures follows up on its previous success with 2008's "Fireproof" -- a sincere story about Christian characters struggling with life's problems without miracles. This time, instead of a fireman with a failing marriage, four cops need help being better fathers.

The film features capable performances and direction, but the message of the film is the real dividing line between audiences who love it and audiences who feel annoyed. The film wears its evangelical heart on its sleeve, and the long-winded preaching can please believers as much as it irks others. For a real movie depicting real Christians learning about faith and fatherhood, "Courageous" is your pick. For an accessible drama that examines the complexities of some real-life problems, look somewhere else.

"Traffic" (R) (The Criterion Collection) [Blu-ray] -- This grittier-than-thou crime thriller released in 2000 uses a diverse set of characters to flip over the rock of the War on Drugs and see the mess beneath. It brought in four Oscars, including one for best director (Steven Soderbergh) and another for its script. Characters on either side of the border struggle personally and professionally with the demons of the drug trade. Soderbergh uses an up-close and visceral perspective, which is reciprocated by great performances from Michael Douglas and Benicio del Toro.

DOG OF THE WEEK

"Abduction" (PG-13) -- Done as a field test for Taylor Lautner's (the shirtless boy from the "Twilight" series) leading-man readiness, this snoozer of wannabe thrills fails to abduct anybody, much less take the audience anywhere but their seats. Lautner plays Nathan, a teenage party boy who stumbles upon some photos on the Internet indicating that his parents aren't his real parents. Nathan gets the girl next door to join him on his quest to discover his

Beyond Our Means: Why America Spends While the World Saves"
by Sheldon Garon
(Princeton University Press, $29.95)
Reviewed by Larry Cox

Americans are spendthrifts when compared with many other parts of the world. We save little, even though the United States has weaker social safety nets and a relatively youthful population. Europeans, on the other hand, save at much higher rates despite generous welfare programs, higher taxes and aging populations.

In a fascinating new book, professor Sheldon Garon of Princeton University traces the development of saving money across three continents from the 19th century through today. He found that Americans were fairly good savers during and immediately after World War II, but attributes it to the public's expanded access to savings institutions. U.S. savings bonds and stamps could be purchased, for example, at work, school and even the local post office.

It's no secret that saving money in the United States has dropped since the 1950s. Commercial banks are less willing to maintain and encourage savings accounts from people of modest means, while the opposite is true in Europe and East Asia. There, many of the

Food for Thought, With Claire Thomas

Claire Thomas is an effervescent, 23-year-old chef with an unusual, family-friendly television show entitled "Food for Thought" that airs on Saturday mornings on most ABC networks. The new show is designed to guide families into the kitchen by presenting food in an interesting new way.

"Food for Thought" is hosted by Thomas and reflects her curiosity about all things culinary. She approaches food from a fresh and enlightening perspective -- from exploring a wide variety of indigenous foods that are celebrated by cultures across the world, to providing easy ways to grow healthy produce in one's own community.

"Food for Thought" not only showcases her passion for food as a lifestyle, but also fulfills her dream of sharing her enthusiasm and knowledge with young people. Thomas is an old-movie buff and worked in the entertainment industry. A job change sparked a desire to find something she could be passionate about. Her parents urged her to explore her interest in food and cooking.

Thomas started a food blog she calls The Kitchy Kitchen (www.thekitchykitchen.com) and discovered a love for recipes and food photography. Soon, the vibrant photographs she took for her website grew into job offers as a food stylist. Working as a food stylist helped her understand how food ought to look, how it should be shot and, most importantly, how she could make it look more delicious.

Thomas approaches food from a West Coast viewpoint and enjoys being surrounded by the diverse culture and amazing produce. Her recipes below for a Farmer's Frittata and a Mixed Berry Parfait With Walnut Coconut Granola reflect her love for using fresh, local produce and healthy ingredients.

If you're trying to get your children and family to eat healthier meals, Thomas and "Food for Thought" are the perfect combination of entertainment and education about food and cooking. For the television schedule, check local listings.

FARMER'S FRITTATA

3 eggs, whole
4 egg whites
1/4 cup milk
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
2 tablespoons olive oil
1/4 cup corn, frozen and thawed or canned and drained
1 garlic clove, minced
1/2 cup cherry tomatoes
2 large asparagus stalks, chopped into 1 inch pieces
1 handful arugula (or spinach)
2 tablespoons mozzarella, optional

1. Preheat oven to 400 F. In a bowl, whisk together the eggs, whites, milk, and salt and pepper.
2. Meanwhile, in a 9-inch pan (a non-stick skillet is great for heat distribution), warm the olive oil; add corn and garlic, and saute until slightly toasted. Add tomatoes and asparagus and let them cook, about 3 to 4 minutes. Add egg mixture and arugula or spinach, and cook for a minute or two until the frittata is just set.
3. Sprinkle with cheese and pop in the oven for 7 to 9 minutes until the eggs have set and the cheese is melted.

MIXED BERRY PARFAIT WITH WALNUT COCONUT GRANOLA

Mixed Berry Parfait
1/2 cup raspberries
1/2 cup strawberries
1/2 cup blueberries
1/2 cup blackberries
1/4 cup orange juice
Pinch orange zest
2 tablespoons good honey
2 cups Greek yogurt

Combine berries, orange juice and zest in a bowl, and refrigerate until juices start running out, about 30 minutes. Serve in a glass bowl, and layer with Greek yogurt and granola, giving each layer a drizzle of honey.

Walnut Coconut Granola

3 cups oats (slow-cooking kind)
3 tablespoons honey
1/4 cup vegetable oil
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 egg white (optional)
3/4 cup toasted walnuts, chopped
1/2 cup coconut

1. Preheat oven to 350 F. Mix oats, brown sugar, honey and oil together. (Fun tip: Pour the honey into the oil for no sticky mess!) Add vanilla, and if you prefer clumpy granola, the egg white. Add the walnuts and coconut, mix, and pour onto a cookie sheet covered in aluminum foil or a silicone mat. Spread over the entire cookie sheet and pop in the oven for 10 minutes.
2. Remove the cookie sheet and with a spatula, break up the granola, flipping pieces over to let the sides brown. Return to the oven for another 10 minutes, or until golden brown. Let the granola cool for 10 to 15 minutes, then gently break it up using the back of a spoon.
Enjoy!
